The Galápagos Archipelago

The Galápagos archipelago is a unique marine wonderland, home to the world's only marine iguana and the northernmost penguins. Here, coral beds share waters with fur seals, all within a remarkable convergence of ocean currents. Nutrient-rich cool waters from the south mingle with warm currents from the north and deep cold currents from the west, creating a vibrant, diverse ecosystem. This extraordinary mix has given rise to unique marine species, with nearly 20% of Galápagos marine life found nowhere else on Earth.
